Sober Living Resources

When leaving treatment, a safe environment is inaccessible for most people, thereby putting their sobriety in danger. Sober living is designed for long-term and supportive residency that strives to provide a mutual support system to achieve success in sobriety. Eliminating the use of drugs and alcohol remains the first step in recovery. However learning to live a drug and alcohol free life takes more time. Studies have indicated that the likelihood of maintaining long-term sobriety double when coupled with residency in a sober living house.

Sober Community Support

Sober community supports are places that provide a sense of safety, support, fellowship, and acceptance to those who are in recovery from alcoholism and/or addiction. These community supports are often self-service spaces that offer education sessions, host self-help groups, and hold sober social/recreational events. They often offer a place to just hang out and make friends with others who are supportive of recovery efforts.
